U.S. Probation Officer Action:

Supervision in this case was accepted by the Western District of Washington (WD/WA) on August 5, 2005. The offender agreed to sign a modification to reside at the community corrections center (CCC), in Seattle, Washington, through the Bureau of Prisons (BOP), upon his release from custody on December 15, 2005. The Court signed the order authorizing this placement for up to 180 days on August 22, 2005.

On March 1, 2006, the offender's supervising U.S. Probation officer (USPO) in Everett, Washington, confronted the offender about compliance issues at the CCC placement. The facility is located at the Pioneer Fellowship House in Seattle, Washington. One significant compliance issue involved the offender ingesting another resident's prescribed medication of Nerutonin. The offender admitted to his assigned officer that he took the medication because it gave him a "meth-like high." He further relayed to the officer that he admittedly enjoys getting high, and had not been high for a very long time. Wesley Byrd knew his use of the drug would not be detected by a urinalysis test.

The offender was warned by his USPO that this type of noncompliance would not be tolerated. He acknowledged his inappropriate behavior. The U.S. Probation Office in Everett, Washington, is asking the Court take no action at this time. This is based on the offender's acceptance of responsibility, and the belief he can secure employment. It should be noted that the offender's drug tests to date have been negative, and that he is involved in the WD/WA "Targeted Offender Employment Program."
